

PUBLIC • PREMIUM

When Your Calendar Is Full But Your Life Is Empty

We don't drown in work. We drown in avoidance disguised as productivity. Filling every square on the calendar is easier than facing the quiet question undern...

Abraham of London • 2026-04-27

We don't drown in work. We drown in avoidance disguised as productivity.

Filling every square on the calendar is easier than facing the quiet question underneath:

- What if I've mastered activity but lost intimacy?
- What if I'm impressive to everyone except the people who matter?
- What if I'm achieving my way into a life I no longer recognize?

Busyness is the new armour. Silence is the new luxury. And presence is the one thing money can't buy back.

This week, commit one sacred rebellion:

- Block one hour titled simply: "Do Not Schedule."
- Do not optimise it. Do not justify it. Do not betray it.
- Sit in the discomfort of stillness.
- Notice which thoughts follow you into the silence.

Because the life you're starving for does not live inside your calendar.

It lives in the pauses you've been avoiding.