Some love makes you nervous.

Not because it's fake -- because it's clean.

It doesn't demand performance. It doesn't manipulate. It doesn't punish you for being human.

And you don't know what to do with that.

This is your reminder:

Not all love is a transaction.

Some people will love you because they actually see you.

Not your productivity. Not your usefulness. You.

If that kind of love finds you, don't sabotage it.

Receive it slowly.

Let it retrain your nervous system.

And let it remind you that you were never created to earn your worth.
