Institutional Alpha Signal: Scenarios are useful only when they carry triggers, consequences, and ownership. Otherwise they are a performance of seriousness.

I. The Governing Thesis

Scenario planning has become a standard mark of strategic maturity. Yet many organisations use it as a symbolic exercise: multiple futures are discussed, documents are produced, and confidence rises without any real increase in preparedness.

II. Why This Pattern Distorts Judgment

Theatre begins when scenarios are detached from operating thresholds. If no one knows what signals would indicate a given scenario is emerging, or who would change what in response, then the exercise has informational value but little governing force.

III. Diagnostic Lens

A strong diagnostic is to ask whether any scenario has changed a real standing decision, reserve posture, staffing plan, or risk tolerance. If not, the work may have educated the room without preparing the institution.

IV. Operational Implications

The remedy is to bind scenarios to action: trigger conditions, accountable owners, reversible commitments, and explicit implications for sequencing. Then scenario planning becomes a discipline of readiness rather than a workshop ritual.

V. Closing Judgment

CONTROLLED CIRCULATION

Institutions cannot rehearse everything. They can, however, stop pretending that possibility mapping alone counts as resilience. Preparedness begins where governance meets foresight.
