

PUBLIC • PREMIUM

When Youre Winning At Work But Losing Yourself

You're getting it done. Deadlines met. Metrics up. Emails answered. People say duplic...

Abraham of London • 2026-04-21

You're getting it done.

Deadlines met. Metrics up. Emails answered.

People say you're "on fire".

But the truth is uglier: you're burning.

Here's the confrontation:

If your job disappeared tomorrow, who would you be?

Not what would you do - who would you be?

If that question makes you panic, you're not ambitious. You're attached.

This week:

- Take one hour that cannot be monetised.
- Do something that restores you with no audience.
- Say no once to prove you still have a spine.

Work is a tool. Not a throne.

And if your success costs your soul, it's not success. It's a well-decorated loss.