

PUBLIC • PREMIUM

When You Feel Too Busy To Care

There is a special kind of exhaustion where you're not just tired of work - you're tired of caring. You care about your family, your future, your health, you...

Abraham of London • 2026-04-27

There is a special kind of exhaustion where you're not just tired of work - you're tired of caring.

You care about your family, your future, your health, your faith... you just don't have any bandwidth left to prove it not even to yourself.

So you do the same thing as everyone else:

You throw more energy at the urgent stuff and quietly hope the important stuff will wait.

Instead of promising to "reorganise your whole life", try this:

- Identify one thing that actually matters to you.
- Give it fifteen undistracted minutes in the next 24 hours.
- Treat that slot as non-negotiable as a meeting with your boss.

Fifteen minutes won't fix your life. But it will do something far more dangerous:

It will remind you that you are not just a calendar being dragged behind other people's priorities.

You are still allowed to choose.