Your childhood matters.

It shaped you. It trained your nervous system. It formed your coping patterns.

But here's the adult reality:

If you keep using your past as a shield, your future will stay hostage.

Let's be blunt:

Understanding is not transformation.

Insight is not repentance.

Naming trauma is not the same as healing it.

This week, keep the compassion -- but add responsibility:

- What pattern do I need to stop?
- What boundary do I need to enforce?
- What behaviour do I need to own?

Your childhood is a chapter.

Stop letting it become the whole book.

Healing is when you stop saying, "This is why I'm like this," and start saying, "This is how I'm changing."
