

PUBLIC • PREMIUM

When You Realise Prayer Is War

Some prayers are not poetic. They're survival. They're not "quiet time." They're warfare. Because you're not just praying for outcomes. You're praying agains...

Abraham of London • 2026-04-27

Some prayers are not poetic.

They're survival.

They're not "quiet time." They're warfare.

Because you're not just praying for outcomes. You're praying against discouragement, confusion, temptation, despair. You are grasping for input.

Here's the hard truth:

Some victories come only through stubborn persistence.

Not because God is slow, but because you're being trained to stand.

This week, don't make prayer a performance.

Make it a posture:

- pray when you don't feel like it
- pray briefly but consistently
- pray specifically
- pray with Scripture when your words run out

The battle isn't always in your schedule.

Sometimes it's in your spirit.

Do it until that becomes your everytime.

And the people who win long-term are the ones who keep praying when nothing looks like it's moving.

That's not delusion.

That's faith under pressure.