

PUBLIC • PREMIUM

When Your Silence Says Too Much

Some people are loud when they're hurt. Others go quiet. Some of us do either of both, depending on the context. Not because they're mature - but because the...

Abraham of London • 2026-04-27

Some people are loud when they're hurt.

Others go quiet.

Some of us do either of both, depending on the context.

Not because they're mature - but because they've learned that talking won't change anything.

So they stop.

Here's the hard truth:

If you can't speak honestly in a relationship, you're not in a relationship. You're in a performance.

You're managing someone else's comfort at the cost of your own truth.

This week, try one small honesty:

- "When you did that, it affected me."
- "I need you to take this seriously."
- "I'm not okay, and I don't want to pretend."

If they dismiss you, note it.

Because your silence isn't the issue. It's the environment that made your voice feel unsafe.

And you don't heal by becoming quieter. You heal by becoming true.