

PUBLIC • PREMIUM

When Your Work Becomes Your Hiding Place

Work is clean. Work is measurable. Work gives you a score. If life feels chaotic, work is a place you can control. So you go there - again and again. Not jus...

Abraham of London • 2026-04-27

Work is clean.

Work is measurable. Work gives you a score.

If life feels chaotic, work is a place you can control.

So you go there - again and again.

Not just to succeed. To hide.

Here's the raw truth:

If your work is the only place you feel valuable, you're not free.

You're employed by your own insecurity.

This week, do something rebellious:

- finish work, then stop
- don't "just check" the email
- sit with yourself long enough to hear what's real

Work is a gift. But it's a terrible refuge.

And one day, if you don't build a home inside your soul, you'll keep building careers as shelters - until you collapse inside the very thing you use to escape.