CONTROLLED CIRCULATION

I. The Governing Thesis

Every institution develops a narrative about itself: why it is winning, what makes it distinctive, and how current momentum should be interpreted. That narrative is useful until it becomes too polished to admit counter-evidence.

II. Why This Pattern Distorts Judgment

Clean narratives create blindness because they reduce the organisation's tolerance for friction. Teams start reporting in ways that harmonise with the prevailing story, inconvenient data is framed as exceptional, and leadership mistakes consistency for truth.

III. Diagnostic Lens

The diagnostic question is whether serious contradiction can survive contact with the senior layer. If emerging weakness must first be translated into the house story before it can be discussed, then intelligence has already been subordinated to narrative protection.

IV. Operational Implications

The practical answer is to build contradiction into the briefing process. Reserve space for what does not fit, what remains unresolved, and what would invalidate the current confidence. Institutions stay resilient by making dissent legible before it becomes crisis.

V. Closing Judgment

A coherent story is not the same thing as a governed reality. The mature leader welcomes the kind of intelligence that roughens the narrative before reality does it more violently.
